

The Honorable John C. Coughenour

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON AT SEATTLE

WASHINGTON STATE REPUBLICAN PARTY, BERTABELLE HUBKA, STEVE NEIGHBORS, MARCY COLLINS,
MICHAEL YOUNG, DIANE TEBELIUS,
MIKE GASTON,

Plaintiffs,

and,

WASHINGTON STATE DEMOCRATIC CENTRAL COMMITTEE, PAUL
BERENDT,

Plaintiff-Intervenors,

and,

LIBERTARIAN PARTY OF
WASHINGTON STATE, RUTH BENNETT,
J. S. MILLS,

Plaintiff-Intervenors,

v.

WASHINGTON STATE GRANGE,

Defendant-Intervenor,

and,

STATE OF WASHINGTON, ROB
MCKENNA, SAM REED,

Defendant-Intervenors.

Case No. C05-0927-JCC

ORDER

1 This matter comes before the Court on Defendant-Intervenor State of Washington's 2 ("State") Motion to Dismiss (Dkt. No. 133), Defendant-Intervenor Washington State Grange's
3 ("Grange") Motion to Dismiss (Dkt. No. 134), Plaintiff-Intervenor¹ Washington State 4 Democratic Central Committee's ("Democratic Party") Motion to Amend and Supplement
5 Complaint (Dkt. No. 137), Plaintiff Washington State Republican Party's ("Republican Party") 6 Motion for Leave to File Supplemental and Amended Complaint (Dkt. No. 140), and the 7 State's Motion to Recover Attorney Fees and for Costs (Dkt. No. 130). Having thoroughly 8 considered the parties' briefing and the relevant record, the Court finds oral argument 9 unnecessary and hereby rules as follows.

10 I. BACKGROUND

11 From 1935 until 2003, candidates for state and local office in Washington State were 12 nominated through a "blanket primary," whereby all candidates from all parties were placed on 13 a single ballot and voters could select a candidate from any party. See Wash. State Grange v.
14 Wash. State Republican Party ("Grange"), 128 S. Ct. 1184, 1187–88 (2008). The candidate 15 who won the plurality of votes within each major party became that party's nominee in the 16 general election. Id. at 1188. This "blanket primary" system was ultimately found to be 17 unconstitutional because it forced parties to allow nonmembers to participate in selecting the 18 parties' nominees. Democratic Party of Wash. State v. Reed, 343 F.3d 1198, 1207 (9th Cir.
19 2003); see also Cal. Democratic Party v. Jones, 530 U.S. 567, 586 (2000) (striking down an 20 identical primary system in California).

21 In 2004, Washington voters approved Initiative 872 ("I-872"), which established a 22 "modified blanket primary." Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1189. Under this system, all elections for 23 "partisan office" start with a primary in which every candidate competes. Id. Each candidate 24

25 ¹ For simplicity, the Court will refer to Plaintiff-Intervenors as "Plaintiffs" and 26 Defendant-Intervenors as "Defendants" for the remainder of this Order.

1 declares his or her “party preference or independent status,” which is designated on the 2 primary ballot with the candidate’s name. See id.; WASH. REV. CODE § 29A.24.031(3). A 3 candidate can choose to identify with whichever party he or she designates, even if that 4 political party would itself prefer otherwise. See Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1189. Voters may select 5 any candidate listed on the ballot, regardless of party preference, and the two candidates that 6 receive the highest votes, regardless of their party designation, advance to the general election.
7 Id.; WASH. REV. CODE § 29A.52.112(2). In this manner, the general election in essence 8 becomes a runoff between the top-two vote getters in the primary.

9 On May 19, 2005, the Republican Party sued to have I-872 declared unconstitutional 10 and to enjoin its implementation. (See Rep. Compl. 12 (Dkt. No. 1).) That same day, the 11 Democratic Party and Libertarian Party moved to intervene as plaintiffs. (See Dkt. Nos. 2, 3.) 12 The Republican Party alleged that the new election scheme (1) compelled it to associate with 13 any candidate who expressed a “preference” for the party, thereby diluting the party’s message; 14 (2) allowed candidates to “appropriate” the party’s name without permission; (3) allowed party 15 nominees to be determined by voters whose beliefs were antithetical to those of the party, in 16 violation of Jones, 530 U.S. at 586; and (4) impermissibly denies major parties protections that 17 it offers to minor parties, in violation of equal protection.² (Compl. ¶¶ 16–23 (Dkt. No. 1 at 5– 18 7).) The Democratic Party made identical claims. (See Dem. Compl. (Dkt. No. 31).) The 19 Libertarian Party made similar First Amendment claims; additionally, it alleged that I-872 20 arbitrarily deprived minor parties access to the general election ballot.³ (See Lib. Compl. ¶ 26– 21 27 (Dkt. No. 28).)

22
23 ² Prior to the enactment of I-872, minor-party candidates, unlike major-party 24 candidates, were selected through party nominating conventions. (See Order Granting Summ.
25 J. 8 (Dkt. No. 87).) The Republican Party’s equal protection argument was premised on its 26 understanding that these provisions survived the enactment of I-872.

³ Whereas the Republican and Democratic Party’s equal protection arguments were premiered on the assumption that minor parties could still nominate their candidates through

1 The Court set an expedited briefing schedule for Plaintiffs' summary judgment motions 2 and required the parties to stipulate to the legal issues that would be covered in the motions.
 3 (See Minute Entry (Dkt. No. 45); Stipulated Statement of Legal Issues (Dkt. No. 40).) On July 4 15, 2005, the Court granted Plaintiffs' motions. (See Order Granting Summ. J. (Dkt. No. 87).)
 5 It held that the modified blanket primary system still served to "nominate" party candidates, 6 despite having been recharacterized as a "winnowing" or a "qualifying" primary. (Id. at 25– 7 26.) Based on this holding, the Court held I-872 unconstitutional on two grounds. First, like the 8 blanket primary invalidated in Jones, the modified blanket primary "'force[d] political parties 9 to associate with—to have their nominees, and hence their positions, determined by—those 10 who, at best have refused to affiliate with their party, and, at worst, have expressly affiliated 11 with a rival,'" in violation of the First Amendment freedom of association. (Id. at 28 (quoting 12 Jones, 530 U.S. at 577).) Second, the Court held that by "allowing any candidate, including 13 those who may oppose party principles and goals, to appear on the ballot with a party 14 designation," I-872 would "foster confusion and dilute the party's ability to rally support 15 behind its candidates." (Id. at 30.) The Court found that the unconstitutional provisions of I-16 872 could not be severed from the remaining provisions and therefore struck down the 17 initiative in its entirety. (Id. at 87.)

18 The Ninth Circuit affirmed. Wash. State Republican Party v. Washington ("Wash. Rep.
 19 I"), 460 F.3d 1108, 1125 (9th Cir. 2006). The panel held that a candidate's self-identification 20 of party preference necessarily created an association between the candidate and the party. Id.
 21 at 1121. By allowing candidates to create such an association against the party's will, I-872 22 constituted "a severe burden on political parties' associational rights" that could not be 24 nomination conventions, the Libertarian Party's ballot-access argument was based on the 25 reverse assumption—that I-872 did not distinguish between major and minor parties, so the 26 only way for a candidate to advance to the general election was to be in the two highest vote getters. (See Lib. Compl. ¶¶ 16–17, 26–27 (Dkt. No. 28).)

1 justified as narrowly tailored to compelling state interests. Id. at 1121, 1123. Accordingly, the 2 panel held I-872 to be unconstitutional on its face. Id. at 1124. The panel also deemed 3 Plaintiffs to be “prevailing parties” under 42 U.S.C. § 1988 and therefore entitled to recover 4 attorneys’ fees on appeal from the State. (See 8/22/06 9th Cir. Fee Order 3 (Dkt. No. 131 at 5 12).) Plaintiffs and the State stipulated as to the specific amount of fees and costs owed to each 6 Plaintiff, and the Ninth Circuit approved the stipulated award. (See 10/3/06 9th Cir. Fee Order
7 2 (Dkt. No. 131 at 19).)

8 The Supreme Court, however, granted certiorari and reversed on the merits. Grange, 9 128 S. Ct. at 1196. The Court emphasized that Plaintiffs’ challenge, as it had appeared before 10 the lower courts, was to I-872’s constitutionality on its face and hence could only succeed if 11 Plaintiffs demonstrated that “the law [was] unconstitutional in all of its applications.” Id. at 12 1190 (emphasis added) (“[A] plaintiff can only succeed in a facial challenge by establishing 13 that no set of circumstances exists under which the Act would be valid” (internal 14 quotation and alteration omitted)). The Court found that “the I-872 primary does not, by its 15 terms, choose parties’ nominees.” Id. at 1192. If a political party chose to nominate a candidate 16 through outside means, this nomination would not be so designated on the ballot, but “[t]he 17 First Amendment does not give political parties a right to have their nominees designated as 18 such on the ballot.” Id. 1193 n.7. Instead, the Court found that each of Plaintiffs’ arguments 19 relied on an assumption that voters would misinterpret a candidate’s self-identified party 20 preference as some form of endorsement by the party. Id. at 1195. Having concluded that each 21 of Plaintiffs’ arguments “rests on factual assumptions about voter confusion,” the Court found 22 that “each fails for the same reason: In the absence of evidence, we cannot assume that 23 Washington’s voters will be misled.” Id. The Court explained that I-872 could be implemented 24 in such a way as to make clear that a candidate’s party-preference designation does not 25 constitute an endorsement from or association with that political party. Id. at 1194. Therefore, 26 the Court rejected the facial challenge to I-872 and lifted this Court’s injunction. Id. at 1195.

1 On remand, the Ninth Circuit vacated its opinion and its orders granting attorneys' fees 2 and costs. Wash. State Republican Party v. Washington ("Wash. Rep. II"), 545 F.3d 1125, 3 1126 (9th Cir. 2008). The panel remanded the case back to this Court with instructions to (1) 4 "dismiss all facial associational rights claims challenging [I-872]"; (2) "dismiss all equal 5 protection claims," because I-872 repealed the regulations differentiating between major and 6 minor parties; and (3) "dismiss as waived all claims that [I-872] imposes illegal qualifications 7 for federal office, sets illegal timing for federal elections or imposes discriminatory campaign 8 finance rules because these claims were neither pled by the parties nor addressed in summary 9 judgment by the district court." Id. In contrast, the panel suggested that this Court "may allow 10 the parties to further develop the record with respect to the claims that [I-872] 11 unconstitutionally constrains access to the ballot and appropriates the political parties' 12 trademarks, to the extent these claims have not been waived or disposed of by the Supreme 13 Court." Id. Finally, the panel directed this Court to "make appropriate findings concerning the 14 parties' settlement of fees and should determine whether restitution or further fee awards are 15 appropriate" Id.

16 Now that the case is back before this Court, Defendants State and Grange move to 17 dismiss the action in the entirety. (Dkt. Nos. 133, 134.) They argue that all of Plaintiffs' claims 18 have been disposed of by the Supreme Court's opinion, either expressly or impliedly. (See id.) 19 In response, Plaintiffs argue that their complaints allege both facial and as-applied challenges 20 to I-872 and only the former were resolved by the Supreme Court. (Dkt. No. 150 at 6–9; Dkt.
21 No. 146 at 10–12; Dkt. No. 179 at 6–7.) They also argue that they raised "trademark" claims 22 that have not yet been resolved. (Dkt. No. 150 at 9–12; Dkt No. 146 at 12–20; Dkt. No. 179 at 23 7–8.) Finally, the Libertarian Party, and the Republican Party to a lesser extent, argues that its 24 ballot access claims have yet to have been meaningfully resolved. (Dkt. No. 179 at 8–11; see 25 also Dkt. No. 150 at 13.)
26

Both the Republican and Democratic Parties also seek leave to amend their Complaints. (Dkt. Nos. 137, 140.) They seek to supplement the Complaints with additional factual allegations to support as-applied challenges to the implementation of I-872 that was adopted once this Court's injunction was lifted. (See Dkt. No. 137 at 8; Dkt. No. 140 at 2.) They also seek to add a novel state constitutional claim, citing the intervening case of Washington Citizens Action of Washington v. State ("WCAW"), 171 P.3d 486 (Wash. 2007) for the argument that I-872 was an invalid enactment because it failed to identify each of the legislative provisions that it repealed. (Dkt. No. 137 at 7–8; Dkt. No. 140 at 2.)

Finally, the State seeks to recover the attorneys' fees and costs that it paid to Plaintiffs when the Ninth Circuit determined them to be "prevailing parties" and seeks instead to recover its own costs as the new prevailing party. (Dkt. No. 130.) In response, Plaintiffs argue that the fee settlement is a binding contract despite the Supreme Court's reversal and that, at a minimum, the State's claim of being the prevailing party is premature. (Dkt. No. 144 at 4–6; Dkt. No. 148 at 5–7, 9; Dkt. No. 178 at 3–5.) Moreover, the Republican Party goes further and argues that it should still be considered a prevailing party, despite its definitive loss on the merits in the Supreme Court, because the losing appeal nonetheless prompted the State to alter its implementation of I-872. (Dkt. No. 148 at 7–9.)

II. DISCUSSION

A. Motions to Dismiss

This Court may dismiss Plaintiffs' Complaints in their entirety "only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Winn v. Ariz. Christian Sch. Tuition Org., 562 F.3d 1002, 1007 (9th Cir. 2009) (internal quotation omitted). In considering a motion to dismiss, the Court must "accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true and construe the pleadings in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party." Knievel v. ESPN, 393 F.3d 1068, 1072 (9th Cir. 2005). Defendants State and Grange argue that the Supreme Court disposed of the only alleged claims for which Plaintiffs were plausibly entitled to relief. (State Mot. to Dismiss 4 (Dkt. No. 133); Grange Mot. to Dismiss 8 (Dkt. No. 134).) In response, Plaintiffs claim that the Complaints allege unresolved as-applied challenges to I-872, along with ballot-access and trademark claims that the Supreme Court did not consider.

1. As-Applied Challenge

The Republican Party's Complaint alleges that I-892 "as implemented by State officials, eliminates mechanisms . . . to protect the First Amendment rights of the Party." (Rep. Compl. ¶ 4 (Dkt. No. 1 at 3) (emphasis added); see also id. ¶ 23 (alleging that "Defendants intend to administer the State's partisan primary in a manner that denies the Party the right to nominate its candidates and control the use of its name." (emphasis added)).) The Complaints of the Democratic and Libertarian Parties make almost identical allegations. (See Dem. Compl. ¶¶ 4, 18 (Dkt. No. 31 at 3, 7); Lib. Compl. ¶¶ 17, 23 (Dkt. No. 28 at 7, 8).) When this Court decided Plaintiffs' motions for summary judgment, it noted that it had "previously directed the parties to limit their briefs to Plaintiffs' facial challenge of [I-872]. The Court reserved issues related to Plaintiffs' as-applied challenge." (Order Granting Summ. J. 13 n.13 (Dkt. No. 87).) Accordingly, the Court finds it clear that Plaintiffs' complaints alleged both facial and as-applied challenges to I-892.⁴

⁴ The State suggests that Plaintiffs could not have brought an as-applied challenge to I-872 in May of 2005 because "the Initiative had not yet been implemented or applied." (State Reply on Mot. to Dismiss 3 (Dkt. No. 164).) However, when this Court considered Plaintiffs' facial challenge, the parties agreed that it was ripe for adjudication and that the action was justiciable based on the "alleged threat to the political parties' associational rights." (Order Granting Summ. J. 13 (Dkt. No. 87).) To the extent that this alleged "threat" was based on the actual (if partial) implementation of some portion of I-872 (see Lib. Compl. ¶ 15 (referencing emergency rules adopted on May 18, 2005, to implement I-872) (Dkt. No. 28 at 6–7)), Plaintiffs had grounds to bring an as-applied challenge, even if the Initiative's provisions had not yet been applied to an election. Cf. Cal. Pro-Life Council, Inc. v. Getman, 328 F.3d 1088, 1094 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Courts have long recognized that one does not have to await the consummation of threatened injury to obtain preventive relief." (internal quotation omitted)).

1 Because this Court only addressed Plaintiffs' facial challenges, those were the only 2 issues on appeal. That fact was crucial to the Supreme Court's reversal, which repeatedly 3 emphasized the nature of the facial challenge before it. See Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1187 4 (reversing because "respondents' arguments" that I-871 "impose[d] a severe burden on 5 political parties' associational rights" "rest on factual assumptions about voter confusion that 6 can be evaluated only in the context of an as-applied challenge . . ."). The Court explained 7 that "[a]t bottom, respondents' objection to I-872 is that voters will be confused by candidates' 8 party-preference designation." Id. at 1193. The Court found that to presume such confusion 9 would be "sheer speculation." Id. "In the absence of evidence, we cannot assume that 10 Washington's voters will be misled. That factual determination must await an as-applied 11 challenge." Id. at 1195 (emphasis added).

12 The Court's opinion clearly left room for, indeed it invited, an as-applied challenge to 13 I-872. Because Plaintiffs raised as-applied challenges and the Supreme Court did not resolve 14 these claims, they retain valid claims that I-872, as implemented in practice, creates the sort of 15 voter confusion that might support a First Amendment claim for violation of the political 16 parties' associational rights. Those are the exact sort of "as-applied" issues that this Court 17 previously "reserved." (Order Granting Summ. J. 13 n.13 (Dkt. No. 87).)

18 Finally, the State seeks to narrowly construe the meaning of I-872's "implementation" 19 so as to exclude certain of Plaintiffs' as-applied challenges from the scope of this action. For 20 example, Plaintiffs explain that Washington's campaign disclosure laws have been integrated 21 into I-872's implementation, such that if a candidate for partisan office "has expressed a party 22 or independent preference . . . , that . . . designation shall be clearly identified in electioneering 23 communications, independent expenditures, or political advertising." WASH. REV. CODE 24 § 42.17.510. The State argues that this does not constitute an "implementation" of I-872, but 25 rather a "clarification" regarding the "implementation of the separate campaign disclosure 26 laws." (State Reply on Mot. to Dismiss 5 (Dkt. No. 164).) This distinction is beside the point.

1 I-872 created the concept of a “party preference” that candidates would explicitly declare and 2 that would be designated with the candidates’ names on the ballot. See WASH. REV. CODE 3 § 29A.24.031(3). As explained by the Supreme Court, the core of Plaintiffs’ “objection to I-4 872 is that voters will be confused by the candidates’ party-preferences”—i.e., that voters will 5 infer “that the parties associate with, and approve of,” the candidates whose names appear next 6 to the party on the ballot. Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1193. To succeed on their as-applied challenge, 7 Plaintiffs must demonstrate that I-872 in practice actually creates the sort of voter confusion 8 that would infringe upon the political parties’ associational rights. To the extent that 9 Washington’s campaign disclosure requirements increase this voter confusion, that is clearly 10 relevant to Plaintiffs’ as-applied challenge.

11 Plaintiffs also argue that I-872 is unconstitutional as-applied to the election of party 12 Precinct Committee Officers (“PCOs”). Each major party’s PCOs sit on that party’s county 13 central committee and certain PCOs sit on the party’s state committee. See WASH. REV. CODE 14 §§ 29A.08.020, .030. A major party’s state committee has the power to call conventions, to 15 provide for the election of delegates to the national party’s convention and for the nomination 16 of presidential electors, and to fill vacancies on a ticket for certain federal or state offices. See 17 See WASH. REV. CODE §§ 29A.08.020. A party’s county central committee also plays a role in 18 filling vacancies when a legislator or county executive belonging to that party leaves office.
19 WASH. CONST. art. 2, § 15. Plaintiffs claim that, since I-872’s implementation, candidates for 20 the office of party PCO are no longer required to demonstrate membership in that party. (See 21 Dem. Resp. to Mot. to Dismiss 8 (Dkt. No. 146).) If true, the Court acknowledges that the 22 “party preference” scheme established by I-872 may be particularly problematic when applied 23 to the election of PCOs. The Supreme Court rejected Plaintiffs’ argument that I-872 “allows 24 primary voters who are unaffiliated with a party to choose the party’s nominee,” because the 25 Court found that “unlike the California primary [invalidated in Jones], the I-872 primary does 26 not . . . choose the parties’ nominees.” Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1192. But party PCOs are party

1 leaders and they have direct control over certain party functions; therefore, it seems reasonable 2 that the application of I-872's party-preference designations and single, undifferentiated ballot 3 to PCO elections might raise associational claims that were not apparent on the face of the 4 initiative.⁵

5 The Court concludes that Plaintiffs have alleged as-applied challenges to I-872's 6 modified blanket primary scheme and that these claims remain unresolved. Plaintiffs may 7 submit evidence to demonstrate that (1) the State's actual implementation of I-872 (including 8 its interaction with the state's campaign disclosure laws) leads to voter confusion, and (2) that 9 this resulting confusion severely burdens the political parties' freedom of association. See 10 Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1195. Plaintiffs may also demonstrate that the application of I-872 to 11 certain elected offices (e.g., party PCOs) specifically burdens the party's right to associate.
 12 (Rep. Resp. to Mot. to Dismiss 6–9 (Dkt. No. 150).) Accordingly, Defendants' motions to 13 dismiss are DENIED with respect to these as-applied challenges.

14 2. Ballot-Access Claims

15 In its Complaint, the Libertarian Party also alleged that “[t]he Fourteenth Amendment 16 equal protection and due process clauses guarantee reasonable access for minor party and 17 independent candidates to the general election ballot.” (Lib. Compl. ¶ 26 (Dkt. No. 28 at 9).) It 18 argued before this Court that any candidate showing at least a “modicum of support” may not 19 constitutionally be excluded from the general election ballot. (Lib. Summ. J. Mot. 18 (Dkt. No.

21 ⁵ The State argues that PCO elections “have nothing whatsoever to do with the 22 implementation of I-872” and that these elections are governed by a “series of statutes enacted 23 long before I-872 was enacted, and left unchanged when I-872 was approved by the voters in 24 2004.” (State Reply to Mot. to Dismiss 4 (Dkt. No. 164).) As an initial matter, Plaintiffs’ allege 25 that the PCO elections were changed in the implementation of I-872 (see Dem. Resp. to Mot.
 26 to Dismiss 8 (Dkt. No. 146), and, for the purpose of this motion to dismiss, the Court must accept Plaintiffs’ allegations as true. See Knievel, 393 F.3d at 1072. Moreover, that Washington has allowed PCOs to be elected from the general population since before I-872 hardly insulates the provision from challenge, given that the state’s earlier election scheme was struck down as unconstitutional for exactly that reason. See Reed, 343 F.3d at 1203.

52); see also Order Granting Summ. J. 11 (Dkt. No. 87). Because this Court granted summary judgment on forced association grounds, it declined to reach the ballot-access issue. (Order Granting Summ. J. 34 (Dkt. No. 87).) For that reason, the issue was not before either the Ninth Circuit or the Supreme Court when they reviewed the case. See Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1195 n.11 (“We do not consider the ballot access . . . arguments as they were not addressed below . . .”). Therefore, the Libertarian Party argues that its ballot-access claims remain unresolved.

The ballot-access argument is based on a line of Supreme Court cases that protected minor parties’ right to access the ballot. In Williams v. Rhodes, the Court invalidated an Ohio statute that required a new party to obtain petitions signed by electors totaling 15% of the number of ballots cast in the prior gubernatorial election, rendering it “virtually impossible for a new political party . . . to be placed on the state ballot.” 393 U.S. 23, 24–25 (1968). In finding the requirement unconstitutional, the Court explained:

The right to form a party for the advancement of political goals means little if a party can be kept off the election ballot and thus denied the equal opportunity to win votes. So also, the right to vote is heavily burdened if that vote may be cast only for one of two parties at a time when other parties are clamoring for a place on the ballot.

Id. at 31; see also Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 787 (1983); but see Jenness v. Fortson, 403 U.S. 431, 442 (1971) (noting that this right to equal ballot access is not absolute and upholding a 5% petition requirement).

As an initial matter, although the Court’s statements in Williams seem to arguably support the Libertarian Party’s position, there is much to distinguish I-872’s modified blanket primary from the system invalidated in that case. Most importantly, in the election schemes at issue in Williams and its progeny, the general election was a minor party’s only opportunity to reach the statewide electorate by ballot. Munro v. Socialist Workers Party, 479 U.S. 189, 199 (1986). The Supreme Court has long made clear that there is a “significant difference” between a scheme like that and one, like Washington’s, that “virtually guarantees” minor parties access to a statewide primary ballot. Id. If minor parties are given equal access to compete in a

1 statewide primary, “[i]t can hardly be said that Washington’s voters are denied freedom of 2 association because they must channel their expressive activity into a campaign at the primary 3 as opposed to the general election.” Id.

4 Indeed, in the election scheme set forth by I-872, the general election becomes, for all 5 intents and purposes, a runoff election between the top-two vote getters of the primary. Putting 6 aside the issue of “party preference” and forced association, there can be no doubt that the 7 “top-two” aspect of I-872 would be permissible if the “primary” were renamed a “general 8 election,” and the “general election” were renamed a “runoff.” Yet the constitutionality of the 9 election statute cannot turn on the identifiers used for its various provisions.

10 Most importantly, the Supreme Court has explicitly approved of the use of a “top-two” 11 general election. In Jones, the Court invalidated California’s blanket primary in part because it 12 was not narrowly tailored to the state’s asserted interest. 530 U.S. at 585. The Court noted that 13 the state could satisfy those same interests by establishing a system as follows:

14 [T]he State determines what qualifications it requires for a candidate to have a 15 place on the primary ballot—which may include nomination by established 16 parties and voter-petition requirements for independent candidates. Each voter, 17 regardless of party affiliation, may then vote for any candidate, and the top two 18 vote getters (or however many the State prescribes) then move on to the general 19 election.

20 See id. (referring to such a system as a “nonpartisan primary”). When this case reached the 21 Supreme Court, it reiterated that “Petitioners are correct that we assumed that the nonpartisan 22 primary we described in Jones would be constitutional.” Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1192 23 (distinguishing between that scheme and I-872 only on the basis of the stated “party 24 preference”).

25 Of course, the hypothetical primary scheme that the Court endorsed in Jones would by 26 definition exclude many parties from the general election ballot. Indeed, it is not unforeseeable that the candidates with the highest and second-highest vote totals would be from the same party, thereby excluding other major and minor political parties alike. See id. at 1189 & n.5.

1 The Supreme Court’s unqualified endorsement of its top-two voting proposal is confirmation
 2 of this Court’s interpretation of Munro and Williams—that after giving all political parties 3 equal and sufficient access to a statewide primary, limiting the general election to the top-two 4 vote getters does not violate the other parties’ right to ballot access.

5 The Republican Party makes a variant of this claim, which it terms “operational denial 6 of ballot access” (see Rep. Resp. to Mot. to Dismiss 13 (Dkt. No. 150)), but this argument is no 7 more successful than the general ballot-access claim. The argument goes that “if seven 8 candidates carrying [the same] party name each receive 10% of the vote at a partisan primary, 9 and two candidates of other parties each receive 15%, [no candidate of the former party would 10 appear] on the general election ballot, despite the receipt by candidates carrying [that] party’s 11 identification of 70% of the total vote.” (Rep. Compl. ¶ 21 (Dkt. No. 1 at 7); Dem. Compl. ¶ 16
 12 (Dkt. No. 31 at 6–7).)

13 This contrived example does not withstand close scrutiny. The Supreme Court held that 14 “the I-872 primary does not, by its terms, choose parties’ nominees”; instead, parties are now 15 free to “nominate candidates by whatever mechanism they choose” and to advocate for and 16 support those nominees outside the ballot. Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1192. The Court also 17 unequivocally stated that “[t]he First Amendment does not give political parties a right to have 18 their nominees designated as such on the ballot.” Id. at 1193 n.7. If a party nominates a 19 candidate in the primary, it is only entitled to have its nominee advance to the general election 20 if that nominee is one of the top-two vote getters. See id. at 1192 (reiterating the Court’s belief 21 that the top-two primary “described in Jones would be constitutional”). If six other candidates 22 choose to identify with that party against its will, that does not entitle the party to have any one 23 of those “imposter” candidates advance to the general election.⁶ Or, on the other hand, if the 24

25 ⁶ To the extent that vote dilution from the party’s nominee to these “imposter” 26 candidates stems from voter confusion about the meaning of the “party preference,” the party might be able to prove an as-applied forced association claim. See supra, II.A.1. However,

1 party does not make a nomination and remains agnostic as between the seven candidates 2 running under its banner, it will have itself brought on the risk of vote dilution and will have 3 only itself to blame.

4 The Supreme Court opinions in this case and in Jones foreclose Plaintiffs' ballot-access 5 claims. That applies equally to the claim that minor parties are denied access to the general 6 election ballot and to the claim that major parties could be "operationally" denied such access.
 7 Therefore, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motions to dismiss as to Plaintiffs' ballot-access 8 claims.

9 3. Trademark Claims

10 Plaintiffs also argue that they have unresolved "trademark" claims in this case. (Dkt.
 11 No. 150 at 9–12; Dkt No. 146 at 12–20; Dkt. No. 179 at 7–8.) Neither the Republican Party nor 12 the Democratic Party explicitly alleged trademark violations; instead, as part of their forced 13 association arguments, those parties alleged that "[a]ny individual may appropriate the Party's 14 name, regardless of whether the Party desires affiliation with that person. (Rep. Compl. ¶ 17 15 (Dkt. No. 1 at 5); Dem. Compl. ¶ 12 (Dkt. No. 31 at 5).) The Libertarian Party came closer to 16 raising an actual trademark claim, alleging:

17 I-872 deprives the [Party] of its proprietary right to the use of the party name, 18 thus leading to voter confusion regarding which candidate(s) are speaking for 19 the party and which are imposters or renegades appropriating the party name for their own purposes. The name "Libertarian Party" is a nationally trademarked name and therefore may be used by candidates only with [the Party's] consent.

20 (Lib. Compl. ¶ 20 (Dkt. No. 28 at 8).) However, other than this passing reference, the 21 complaint makes no allegation of trademark infringement on the part of Defendants and makes 22 no reference to the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), or Washington State trademark law. (Id.)

23
 24
 25 26 there is no reason to duplicate and recharacterize this forced association claim as an "operational denial of ballot access."

1 Accordingly, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs did not properly raise trademark violations in 2 their complaints.⁷

3 Moreover, even if Plaintiffs had raised trademark claims at the start of this case, the 4 Court would dismiss those claims as being without merit. There can be no doubt that the mere 5 statement of preference for one party over others does not implicate trademark protection for 6 that party's name; indeed, Plaintiffs do not argue otherwise. Instead, they argue that the 7 statements of party preference may be made in ways that lead to voter confusion or dilution of 8 their "famous marks." (See Dem. Resp. to Mot. to Dismiss 16, 17 (Dkt. No. 146).) To 9 understand these claims, the Court must distinguish between two different types of 10 statements—those made directly by the State (e.g., on the ballot, in the voter's pamphlets) and 11 those made by the candidates themselves (e.g., in political advertising).

12 As for statements made by the State on the ballot or in voter's pamphlets, the Court 13 finds that these uses of the parties' names are not covered under either federal or state 14 trademark law. Trademark law is designed, first and foremost, to protect the owners of a mark 15 against improper commercial uses. See, e.g., 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a) (limiting trademark 16 confusion and misrepresentation actions to "uses in commerce" "in connection with any goods 17 or services or any container for goods"); 15 U.S.C. § 1125(c)(3)(C) (specifically excluding 18 "noncommercial use[s] of a mark" from trademark dilution actions); WASH. REV. CODE 19 § 19.77.140, .160 (providing similar limitations under state law). Although trademark 20 protections have been extended to nonprofit and political groups, see United We Stand 21 America, Inc. v. United We Stand America New York, Inc. ("United We Stand"), 128 F.3d 86, 22 89–90 (2d. Cir. 1997), those protections cannot justify extending federal trademark regulation

23
24 ⁷ The Supreme Court noted in a footnote that the Libertarian Party "argue[d] that I-872 25 is unconstitutional because of its implications for . . . trademark protection of party names 26" Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1195 n.11. However, the fact that the Libertarian Party made that argument to the Supreme Court does not mean that it properly raised the claim in its initial Complaint.

1 to state ballots. In United We Stand, a new political organization split off from its parent 2 political organization and began appropriating the parent organization's trademark in its 3 political activities. Id. at 88. The Second Circuit held that the new organization's political 4 activities (e.g., political organizing, endorsing candidates, distributing political literature) were 5 "services" within the meaning of 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), because "[a]lthough not undertaken for 6 profit, they unquestionably render a service." United We Stand, 128 F.3d at 90. Unlike the 7 organizational activities at issue in United We Stand, the State's administration of an election 8 cannot reasonably be analogized to a commercial "service." Moreover, Plaintiffs fail to 9 explain, and the Court fails to see, how the State's statements on the ballot or in the voter 10 pamphlets can reasonably be considered to have been made "in commerce."⁸ Accordingly, the 11 Court concludes that the State's expression of candidates' party preferences on the ballot and 12 in the voter pamphlets may not form the basis of a federal or state trademark violation.

13 Plaintiffs also point to Washington's campaign disclosure laws, which require that a 14 candidate who has expressed a party preference on the declaration of candidacy clearly identify 15 that preference in "electioneering communications, independent expenditures, or political 16 advertising." WASH. REV. CODE § 42.17.510(1); see also PDC's 2008 "Political Advertising" 17 Brochure, <http://www.pdc.wa.gov/archive/guide/brochures/pdf/2008/2008.Bro.Adv.pdf> 18 (allowing common political party abbreviations or official symbols or logos to be used as 19 identification). A candidate's electioneering and political advertising falls much closer to the 20 sorts of "services" that could be covered under trademark law. See United We Stand, 128 F.3d

21
22 ⁸ Certain references to "commerce" in the trademark laws are meant to broadly invoke 23 Congress's power under the Commerce Clause, see United We Stand, 128 F.3d at 92, but 24 trademark dilution actions under 15 U.S.C. § 1125(c) must actually be "commercial" in nature.
25 See Panavision Intern., L.P. v. Toeppen, 141 F.3d 1316, 1324 (9th Cir. 1998) (requiring 26 plaintiff to prove that "defendant is making a commercial use of the mark in commerce" and noting that the registration of a domain name, without more, is not a commercial use).
Plaintiffs fail to demonstrate how the wording of the State's ballot or voter pamphlet falls under either definition of "commerce."

1 at 90. However, to the extent that a candidate's statements could constitute a trademark 2 violation, that violation would have been committed by the candidate, not the State; the State 3 would presumably only be liable if it had required the candidate to improperly appropriate a 4 political party's trademark. Nothing in I-872 requires a candidate to state a party preference, 5 WASH. REV. CODE § 29A.24.030(3) (allowing each "candidate to indicate his or her major or 6 minor party preference, or independent status"), and nothing in Washington's campaign 7 disclosure laws requires a candidate who has stated a party preference to disclose his or her 8 preference in a manner that would violate that preferred party's trademark, see WASH. REV.
9 CODE § 42.17.510(1) (requiring only that the "party or independent designation shall be clearly 10 identified" on applicable communications). A candidate who has stated a party preference may 11 satisfy the campaign disclosure laws without appropriating the party's trademark simply by 12 identifying the party designation in a manner that makes clear that it only indicates a 13 preference for that party. Cf. Grange, 128 S. Ct. at 1193 (finding no basis to presume that a 14 well-informed electorate would be confused by a statement of party preference). That the state 15 allows candidates to satisfy its campaign disclosure requirement through the use of 16 abbreviations or logos is beside the point; many candidates (e.g., those that are supported or 17 endorsed by the party) will presumably be allowed to use those abbreviations or logos without 18 violating the party's trademark. If an "imposter" candidate chose to identify with a party 19 against its will and attempted to satisfy the state's campaign disclosure laws by 20 misappropriating the party's name, common abbreviation, or logo, then that candidate might 21 arguably be liable for a trademark violation; however, nothing in Washington law would 22 require or even encourage such misappropriation, so none of the Defendants in this case would 23 be liable for that violation.

24 The Court finds that Plaintiffs failed to properly allege trademark violations under 25 federal or state law and that any claims they have subsequently argued are without merit.
26 Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss any trademark violations.

B. Motions to Amend

The Republican and Democratic Parties have both moved to supplement and amend their Complaints. (Dkt. Nos. 137, 140.) Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a), once a responsive pleading has been served, “a party may amend its pleading only with the opposing party’s written consent or the court’s leave. The court should freely give leave when justice so requires.” “The policy of allowing amendments is to be applied with extreme liberality.” Waldrip v. Hall, 548 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir. 2008) (internal quotation omitted). Courts may consider several factors, including “bad faith, undue delay, prejudice to the opposing party, futility of the amendment, and whether the party has previously amended his pleadings.” Id.

The Democratic Party moves to amend its Complaint in Intervention to:

- (1) Delete[] and add[] parties to reflect dismissals, withdrawals, substitutions and interventions that have occurred since the original Complaint in Intervention was filed;
- (2) Supplement[] the factual allegations with respect to the proposed implementation of I-872 that led to this litigation in order to conform to evidence received and considered by the Court after the date of the original pleading;
- (3) Supplement[] the factual allegations to set forth material transactions, events and occurrences that have happened after the date of the original Complaint in Intervention to reflect the State’s abandonment of its original implementation of I-872 and its new implementation of I-872 adopted in 2008;
- (4) Supplement[] the Democratic Party’s cause of action for forced association to enumerate further the associations forced upon the Party by the State’s implementation of I-872;
- (5) Supplement[] the Democratic Party’s cause of action for injunctive relief to include as a basis selective enforcement of election laws by State officials.
- (6) Add[] a new cause of action challenging the constitutionality of I-872 in light of the State’s position taken in this proceeding after the date of the original Complaint in Intervention, and in its proposed implementation of I-872, that I-872 impliedly repealed or amended various election laws that were not included in the text of the initiative as required by Article II, § 37 of Washington’s constitution.

1 (Dem. Mot. to Amend 2 (Dkt. No. 137).) The Republican Party moves to make similar 2 amendments and substitutions to its Complaint. (See Rep. Mot. to Amend (Dkt. No. 140).)

3 As the Court has described above, Plaintiffs have alleged unresolved as-applied forced 4 association challenges to the State's implementation of I-872. See supra, II.A.1. Because the 5 implementation of I-872 has crystallized and evolved since the Complaints were first filed in 6 2005, the Court finds that it is imperative that Plaintiffs be granted leave to amend in order to 7 clarify their specific challenges to the current implementation. Allowing such amendment will 8 identify the relevant issues moving forward so as to focus and limit the scope of the litigation 9 regarding the as-applied First Amendment claims.

10 Although not strictly necessary, the Court also approves Plaintiffs' requests to update 11 their pleadings to reflect the changed parties in the litigation and to add any relevant facts that 12 have occurred since the original filings. However, any new factual allegations should be 13 relevant to the ongoing as-applied First Amendment challenge. For example, the Court is 14 doubtful of the necessity of "[s]upplement[ing] the factual allegations with respect to the 15 proposed implementation of [I-872] that led to this litigation." (Dem. Mot. to Amend. 2 (Dkt.
16 No. 137).) One seeking declaratory and injunctive relief may only bring an as-applied 17 challenge to a statute as it is currently being applied. At this juncture, therefore, any alleged 18 deficiencies with the initial proposed implementation of I-872 are irrelevant. If Plaintiffs wish 19 to include such facts to explain the history of the litigation or to provide necessary context, the 20 Court is not opposed; however, Plaintiffs should limit their allegations of constitutional 21 violations to the current implementation of I-872.

22 Moreover, it is important that Plaintiffs' amended pleadings are updated to reflect not 23 only their specific challenges to the State's implementation of I-872 but also the specific relief 24 they request to remedy those challenges. The initial Complaints focused on Plaintiffs' 25 challenges to I-872's facial validity; as a result, Plaintiffs requested broad relief "[d]eclaring [I-26 872] unconstitutional and declaring that the primary system in effect immediately before the 1 passage of I-872 remains in effect.” Since then, however, the Supreme Court has upheld the 2 facial validity of I-872, explicitly finding “that there are a variety of ways in which the State 3 could implement I-872 that would eliminate any real threat of voter confusion.” Grange, 128 4 S. Ct. at 1193–94 (noting that each of Plaintiffs’ contentions “depend . . . on the possibility that 5 voters will be confused as to the meaning of the party-preference designation”). Now that the 6 Supreme Court has held that I-872 can be implemented without violating Plaintiffs’ right to 7 association, Plaintiffs will not be able to strike down I-872 in its entirety. Instead, the best that 8 Plaintiffs can achieve is to invalidate certain portions of I-872’s implementation and enjoin the 9 State from implementing I-872 in specific ways that lead to voter confusion or other forms of 10 forced association. For example, if Plaintiffs’ challenge the specific wording used on the ballot 11 or in the voter’s guide, they should identify the language currently used and request specific 12 relief to remedy any resulting confusion. Similarly, if Plaintiffs challenge the application of I-13 872 to the election of party PCOs (see Dem. Resp. to Mot. to Dismiss 11 (Dkt. No. 146)), they 14 should identify how to remedy this specific application.

15 Finally, the Court denies the Republican and Democratic Parties’ request to add novel 16 challenges to I-872’s enactment based on article II, section 37 of the Washington constitution.
17 (See Dem. Mot. to Amend 2 (Dkt. No. 137); Rep. Mot. to Amend 7 (Dkt. No. 140).) Article II, 18 section 37 provides that “[n]o act shall ever be revised or amended by mere reference to its 19 title, but the act revised or the section amended shall be set forth at full length.” WASH. CONST.
20 art. II, § 37. The purpose of this section is (1) “to avoid amendatory legislation that merely 21 substitutes one phrase for another, without examination of the original statute, such that the 22 amendatory statute, standing alone, conveyed no meaning at all”; (2) “to ensure disclosure of 23 the general effect of the new legislation”; and (3) “to show its specific impact on existing laws 24 in order to avoid fraud or deception.” WCAW, 171 P.3d at 491. However, that section of the 25 state constitution only applies to “amendatory” legislation, so a reviewing “court must [first] 26 determine whether the bill is such a complete act that the scope of the rights created or affected

1 by the bill can be ascertained without referring to any other statute or enactment.” Id. (quoting 2 Citizens for Responsible Wildlife Mgmt. v. State (“CRWM”), 71 P.3d 644, 654 (Wash. 2003).
3 The Washington Supreme Court has read section 37 narrowly, noting that it “does not apply in 4 all cases where a new act, in effect, amends another. Where the new law is independent, and no 5 further search is required to know the law which the new act covers, the new act does not come 6 within section 37.” CRWM, 71 P.2d at 654 (internal quotation omitted).

7 In their initial Complaints, the Republican and Democratic Parties argued that I-872 8 violated equal protection by allowing minor parties to skip the modified blanket primary and 9 instead to nominate candidates for the general election through a convention process. (See, e.g., 10 Rep. Compl. ¶ 22–23 (Dkt. No. 1).) This Court rejected that argument, concluding that I-872 11 treated minor parties the same as all other parties. (Order Granting Summ. J 31–34 (Dkt. No.
12 87).) Although the initiative did not expressly repeal, amend, or otherwise address the previous 13 minor-party nominating statutes, it specifically defined a primary as “a procedure for 14 winnowing candidates for public office to a final list of two as part of a special or general 15 election.” I-872 § 5 (emphasis added). Moreover, the Court noted that the 2004 Voter’s 16 Pamphlet expressly stated that the initiative would treat major and minor parties alike. (See 17 Order Granting Summ. J 32–33 (Dkt. No. 87).) The Court concluded “as a matter of law that it 18 was the intent of the voters who enacted [I-872] that it be a complete act in itself and cover the 19 entire subject matter of earlier legislation governing minor parties.” (Id. at 33.)

20 The Republican and Democratic Parties now argue that there are “colorable questions 21 of state law” as to whether I-872 violated article II, section 37 of the Washington constitution 22 by not explicitly stating that it would repeal the minor-party nominating statutes. (See, e.g., 23 Dem. Mot. to Amend 7 (Dkt. No. 137).) Accordingly, they move to amend their Complaints to 24 add this new claim based on the state constitution. (Id. at 2.)

25 As an initial matter, neither party provides any reasonable justification for not bringing 26 this claim in its initial Complaint. They purport to rely on WCAW, 171 P.3d 486, which was

1 decided while this case was on appeal. (See Dem. Mot. to Amend 7 (Dkt. No. 137); Rep. Mot.
2 to Amend 5 (Dkt. No. 140).) However, WCAW concerned a narrow question: whether 3 amendatory initiatives need to set forth the content of the statute being amended as it stands at 4 the time the initiative is filed or at the time of the vote. WCAW, 171 P.3d at 496 (concluding the 5 later). The basic requirement under article II, section 37 that “amendatory laws set forth at full 6 length the law to be amended,” id. at 488, had long preexisted WCAW. As this Court 7 previously described, I-872 clearly intended to repeal the minor-party nomination process (see 8 Order Granting Summ. J 31–34 (Dkt. No. 87)) even though it did not explicitly state that it was 9 repealing those statutes (id.). As a result, the parties had the factual basis to raise their state 10 constitutional claim back in 2005.

11 Moreover, even if the parties had a reasonable justification for failing to raise this claim 12 at the outset, the Court would decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction. Under 28 U.S.C.
13 § 1367, this Court may exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims “that are so 14 related to claims in the action . . . that they form part of the same case or controversy under 15 Article III.” “A state law claim is part of the same case or controversy when it shares a 16 ‘common nucleus of operative fact’ with the federal claims and the state and federal claims 17 would normally be tried together.” Bahrampour v. Lampert, 356 F.3d 969, 978 (9th Cir. 2004).
18 In this case, the remaining federal claims solely concern an as-applied challenge to I-872’s 19 implementation (i.e., whether the initiative, as applied, forces the political parties to associate 20 with nonmembers against their will). In contrast, this newly alleged state law claim solely 21 concerns I-872’s enactment (i.e., whether the initiative properly identified the statutes it 22 intended to amend and repeal so as to comply with the state constitution). These questions are 23 entirely distinct from one another and share no apparent factual similarity; therefore, the Court 24 is doubtful that the newly asserted state constitutional claim is sufficiently related to the 25 remaining as-applied First Amendment challenge to assert supplemental jurisdiction under 28 26 U.S.C. § 1367(a).

1 Finally, the Court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a related 2 claim that “raises a novel or complex issue of State law” or “substantially predominates over 3 the [federal] claim[s].” See 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(1)–(2). If either of these circumstances is 4 present, the Court should decline jurisdiction if doing so “comports with the underlying 5 objective of most sensibly accommodating the values of economy, convenience, fairness, and 6 comity.” O’Connor v. Nevada, 27 F.3d 357, 363 (9th Cir. 1994) (internal quotation and 7 alterations omitted). The applicability of article II, section 37 to I-872’s enactment undoubtedly 8 raises novel and complex issues of state constitutional law best decided by the state courts. See 9 id. at 363 (finding a difficult question of state constitutional law “is the very sort of ‘novel’ 10 issue that will usually justify declining jurisdiction over the claim”).

11 C. Fees

12 Finally, the State moves to recover the attorneys’ fees that it paid to Plaintiffs after the 13 Ninth Circuit concluded that they were “prevailing parties” in the litigation before that Court.
 14 (See Mot. to Recover Fees 2–3 (Dkt. No. 130).) The State argues that Plaintiffs are no longer 15 “prevailing parties” because the Ninth Circuit decision in their favor was reversed by the 16 Supreme Court and the panel order granting attorneys’ fees was vacated. See Wash. Rep. II, 17 545 F.3d at 1126. The State also claims that it is the new prevailing party, entitled to recover 18 its own costs under Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 39(a)(3). (See Mot. to Recover Fees 3 19 (Dkt. No. 130) (seeking $306.78 in costs).)

20 Plaintiffs make several arguments in opposition to the State’s motion. First, the 21 Republican Party argues that it is still a prevailing party entitled to its attorneys’ fees on 22 appeal. (Rep. Resp. to Mot. to Recover Fees 8 (Dkt. No. 148).) To support this argument, the 23 party claims that that the State materially altered the implementation of I-872 as a result of this 24 lawsuit—notably, the State changed the proposed ballot to make it clearer that the party-25 preference designations were not meant to signify actual associations between the candidates 26 and the parties in the question. (Id. at 4–5.) The Republican Party cites Farrar v. Hobby for the

1 proposition that “a plaintiff ‘prevails’ when actual relief on the merits of his claim materially 2 alters the legal relationship between the parties by modifying the defendant’s behavior in a way 3 that directly benefits the plaintiff,” 506 U.S. 103, 111 (1992), and it argues that the changed 4 ballot constitutes a “material alter[ation]” in the parties’ “legal relationship” (Rep. Resp. to 5 Mot. to Recover Fees 9 (Dkt. No. 148)). However, the party ignores the clear statement in 6 Farrar that to be considered a prevailing party “[t]he plaintiff must obtain an enforceable 7 judgment against the defendant from whom fees are sought . . . or comparable relief through a 8 consent decree or settlement.” 506 U.S. at 111; see also Buckhannon Bd. & Care Home, Inc. v.
9 West Virginia, 532 U.S. 598, 605 (2001) (rejecting the “catalyst theory” that a plaintiff can be 10 considered a “prevailing party” based on a defendant’s voluntary change in behavior). In 11 vacating its order granting attorneys’ fees and costs, the Ninth Circuit made clear that Plaintiffs 12 are no longer the prevailing parties in the appeal. See Wash. Rep. II, 545 F.3d at 1126.

13 In the alternative, Plaintiffs argue that even if they are no longer prevailing parties, they 14 are entitled to keep the fees because the State is bound by the stipulation that was filed with the 15 Ninth Circuit. (See, e.g., Dem. Resp. to Mot. to Recover Fees 4–6 (Dkt. No. 144).) The parties 16 agree that the stipulation, like any settlement, is a contract that must be interpreted under state 17 law. See Jeff D. v. Andrus, 899 F.2d 753, 759 (9th Cir. 1989). Washington follows “the 18 objective manifestation theory of contracts,” whereby courts attempt to determine the parties’ 19 intent by looking to the reasonable meaning of the words used. Hearst Commc’ns, Inc. v.
20 Seattle Times Co., 115 P.3d 262 (Wash. 2005) (explaining that the subjective intent of the 21 parties is generally irrelevant if the intent can be determined from the actual words used).
22 Under the “context rule” set forth in Berg v. Hudesman, 801 P.2d 222 (Wash. 1990), certain 23 forms of extrinsic evidence may be admissible to interpret the meanings of specific words and 24 terms used in the agreement; such evidence may include “(1) the subject matter and objective 25 of the contract, (2) all the circumstances surrounding the making of the contract, (3) the 26 subsequent acts and conduct of the parties, and (4) the reasonableness of respective

1 interpretations urged by the parties.” See Hearst, 115 P.3d at 266. However, extrinsic evidence 2 is not admissible to “show an intention independent of the instrument or to vary, contradict or 3 modify the written word.” Id. at 267 (internal quotation omitted). In particular, under the parol 4 evidence rule, “prior or contemporaneous negotiations and agreements are said to merge into 5 the final, written contract,” so evidence of those negotiations is inadmissible. Emrich v.
6 Connell, 716 P.2d 863, 866 (1986).

7 On August 22, 2006, the day the Ninth Circuit filed its opinion in favor of Plaintiffs, 8 the appellate panel issued an order “award[ing] reasonable attorney’s fees to the political 9 parties as against the State of Washington.” (See 8/22/06 9th Cir. Fee Order 3 (Dkt. No. 131 at 10 12).) On September 18, 2006, Plaintiffs and the State filed a signed document with the Court in 11 which they stipulated:

12 “[Plaintiffs] are entitled to an order requiring the State to pay [Plaintiffs’] 13 attorneys’ fees and costs in the following amounts, incurred to date in the Ninth Circuit portion of the Appeal:

14 Republican Party: $54,457.65 (attorneys’ fees); $639.60 (costs)
15 Democratic Party: $37,460.77 (attorneys’ fees); $213.20 (costs)
Libertarian Party: $14,977.80 (attorneys’ fees); $1,323.32 (costs)

16 (9/18/06 Fee Stipulation 2 (Dkt. No. 131 at 16).) The stipulation further stated that “[n]o 17 waiver is intended of any claims for further proceedings in the appeal or in any other aspect of 18 the case” (Id.)

19 Under the Berg “context rule,” this Court must consider the Ninth Circuit’s prior 20 determination of fee liability as part of the “circumstances surrounding the making of the 21 contract” when interpreting the words of the agreement to discern the parties’ mutual intent.
22 See Hearst, 115 P.3d at 266. Placed in the context of this prior order, the Court finds that the 23 reasonable interpretation of the contract’s text is that the parties were stipulating to the specific 24 “amounts” the State owed each party, not to the State’s overall liability for attorneys’ fees 25 (which had already been determined by the Ninth Circuit). The parties’ explicit statement that 26 “no waiver [was] intended of any claims for further proceedings” plainly reserved the State’s

1 right to bring any claims in further proceedings that it could otherwise bring, including a claim 2 that it was entitled to reimbursement of attorneys' fees because the Ninth Circuit's decision 3 had been reversed on the merits. See Cal. Med. Ass'n v. Shalala, 207 F.3d 575, 577–78 (9th 4 Cir. 2000) ("Since the fee award is based on the merits judgment, reversal of the merits 5 removes the underpinnings of the fee award.").

6 Both the Republican and Democratic Parties seek to introduce extrinsic evidence that 7 they had informed the State by e-mail during negotiations that they "underst[oo]d this 8 settlement will be final as to our claims for attorneys' fees and costs for the Ninth Circuit 9 proceedings . . . irrespective of further proceedings in the case." (9/15/06 E-mail from James 10 Pharris (Dkt. No. 145 at 7); see also 9/15/06 E-mail from John White (Dkt. No. 149 at 35).)
11 Under the parol evidence rule, however, evidence of "prior or contemporaneous negotiations" 12 are inadmissible to prove an intention independent of the instrument. See Hearst, 115 P.3d at 13 267. If the political parties had wished to make their subjective "understanding" of the contract 14 binding upon the State, they should have added this additional term to the signed stipulation.

15 Accordingly, the Court finds that the stipulation between the State and the political 16 parties extended only to the "amounts" owed to each party.⁹ Because the Supreme Court 17 reversed the Ninth Circuit on the merits and the appellate panel subsequently vacated its prior 18 order finding the State liable for fees and costs, the State is entitled to be reimbursed those 19 funds.

21
22 ⁹ Both the Republican and Democratic parties argue that this interpretation of the 23 stipulation renders the contract "illusory." (See, e.g., Rep. Resp. to Mot. to Recover Fees 6 24 (Dkt. No. 148) ("The Republican Party would have permanently conceded a portion of the fees 25 to which it was entitled, but the State had merely made a 'refundable deposit.'").) However, the 26 Court's plain-meaning interpretation of the stipulation is still supported by consideration from all parties. Indeed, the consideration is the same as that in any settlement agreement: each party gave up its right to undertake further litigation (as to the specific amounts owed), and in exchange it saved the resources required to undertake such litigation and the risk that the court might grant a less favorable award.

1 As for the State's claim that it is entitled to $306.78 in costs as the prevailing party on 2 appeal, the Court concludes that this determination is best left for the conclusion of these 3 proceedings. Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 39(a)(3) provides that generally "if a 4 judgment is reversed, costs are taxed against the appellee." However, this rule only applies 5 "unless . . . the court orders otherwise." FED. R. APP. P. 39(a)(3). Given the small amount of 6 funds at issue and the ongoing debate as to whether Plaintiffs would be able to recover their 7 fees and costs from this appeal if they ultimately succeed on their as-applied challenge 8 (compare Mot. to Recover Fees 7 (Dkt. No. 130), with Rep. Resp. to Mot. to Recover Fees 9 9 (Dkt. No. 148)), the Court concludes that an award of costs at this juncture would be 10 inappropriate.

11 III. CONCLUSION

12 For the foregoing reasons, the State's Motion to Dismiss (Dkt. No. 133) and Grange's 13 Motion to Dismiss (Dkt. No. 134) are DENIED as to Plaintiffs' as-applied forced association 14 claims but GRANTED as to each of Plaintiffs' other claims.

15 The Democratic Party's Motion to Amend and Supplement Complaint (Dkt. No. 137)
16 and the Republican Party's Motion for Leave to File Supplemental and Amended Complaint 17 (Dkt. No. 140) are GRANTED as to amendments necessary and related to the ongoing as-18 applied challenge but DENIED as to Plaintiffs' proposed state constitutional law claims.

19 The State's Motion to Recover Attorney Fees and for Costs (Dkt. No. 130) is 20 GRANTED as to the recovery of previously paid attorneys' fees and costs but DENIED as to 21 reimbursement for the State's costs.

22 //

23 //

24 //

25 //

26 //

1 DATED this 20th day of August, 2009.

2
3
4

5 John C. Coughenour
6 United States District Judge
7
8
9 10 11 12
13
14
15
16
17
18 19 20 21
22
23
24
25
26